Postdoctoral fellow at Sciences Po Aix (CHERPA), France.

Background

She holds a PhD in Political Science from Sciences Po Paris. Her main research interests include power relationships at the neighbourhood level, administrative and social work of neighbourhood residents' committees, urban housing, segregation, and housing conflicts in Beijing and Chongqing. She recently published « Gouverner par la communauté de quartier en Chine : ethnographie de la bureaucratisation participative des comités de résidents à Pékin », Revue française de science politique, vol. 65, n°1, February 2015.

Current Research

Her latest research focuses on medium-size cities in China. She currently lives in Datong, in Shanxi province, where she studies the main political and social issues raised after the former mayor was transferred to another city. For instance, she tries to analyse the interactions between inhabitants and city representatives (information, conflict, mediation) during the process of demolition-relocation (chaiqian) in the city centre.
